VOL. VII.

RICHMOND, CALIFORNIA, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1909.

NO. 38.

THE MEASURE OF MAN.

He who espouses perfection
Must follow the threefold plan
Of soul and mind and body
To compass the stature of man.

For deep in the primal substance,
With power and purpose and poise—
An order under the chaos,
A mystic beneath the noise—

The urge of a secret patience
Thrashed into rhyme and form
Till instinct attained to vision
And the sentient clay grew warm.

For sense was a smoldering fire
And spirit a breath of air
Blowing out of the darkness,
Fostering reason's bare

By loving, learning and doing,
Being must pass and climb
To goodness, to truthful beauty
Through energy, space and time.

Out of the infinite essence,
For the eternal empty,
Fostering freedom and kindling,
Symmetry, wisdom and joy.

Wherefore, the triple dominion—
Reason, science and art—
We may not disrupt nor divide,
Hetting its kingdoms apart.

But even, with glowing ardor,
After the ancient plan,
Build the love and the rapture
Into the life of man.

—Bilis Carman

Miss Priscilla's Experiment

The chestnuts were just bursting into bloom. For weeks now Priscilla had been watching them, first the big leaf buds bursting and growing day by day, then the torchlike sprays of budding blossoms till in a few days the tall trees would be beautiful with the waxlike flowers.

But Priscilla knew she would not be there then. Great tears rolled up in her eyes, and she turned impatiently from the window and faced the fussy little lawyer who had just been telling her there was nothing left now her father was dead, that even the old house and its furniture must be sold to pay the debts, the doctor, the nurses and the hundred and one expenses of their father's long illness.

"I shall be pleased to advise you, or help you in any way," the old man said nervously as he went out, but Priscilla shrugged her shoulders. An old bachelor, who knew nothing of girls or their ways, what could he do?

She stooped to pick up a paper he had dropped, then, seeing it was a letter, called after him. "But he has gone." Still knowing why she did it, she smoothed over the folded sheet, admiring the neat even calligraphy of the writer until, as her eyes fell on the signature, she started.

Colwyn Warr. How familiar it seemed! She had read and reread his books till she almost knew some of them by heart.

It was out of that this man of letters should write her little letter. When our thinking it was wrong, she read the letter through.

"Dear Fairfax," it read. "I don't want a young woman. They bore me to distraction. Although I am sorry for your postage, I'd rather not establish mutual admiration so fully here. That one sensible old who can type to my satisfaction and who can write a decent hand, I don't even object to gray hair, so long as she can type well and hold her tongue. A chattering brat and butter miss would drive me mad in a fortnight."

For a minute or two Priscilla looked puzzled, then she frowned. After that she smiled, and finally she laughed.

"The old dear," she said. "So he's been trying to get me a post."

The next moment a look of deep irritation filled her eyes.

"'Till show Mr. Colwyn Warr I'm not the chattering brat and butter miss he imagines me to be," she said, and springing up she looked at herself long and earnestly in the glass.

A tall, pale-faced girl, with deep blue eyes and hair like sunbeams, looked back at her. Even when garbed in black no one could call her sensible, and she looked like the spirit of spring.

"I'll do it," she said, with decision. In her voice and she stole quietly upstairs, pausing for a moment with a little catch in her breath beside the door of the library, where she and her father had spent so many happy hours it did not seem possible that the white-haired old scholar would never sit in there again with his beloved books. A mist crept over her eyes, and she shook herself with a weary sigh. For years she and her father had been alone, all in all to each other. Now she was alone.

Upstairs, in the dingy attire she donned, she laughed softly as she viewed herself in mirror off which she wiped the dust of years. A complete change had been effected in her appearance. A wig of gray, with cork screw curls on either side, a pair of smoked glasses and a quaint mantle and ancient bonnet transformed her into a demure Quakeress of sixty years or thereabouts, and Priscilla, whose forbears had indeed been Quakers, laughed in genuine enjoyment.

"I do look a respectable, sensible old sort of a body," she said. "I wonder what Mr. Fairfax will think."

What Mr. Fairfax really thought she never knew, for, as she was wont afterward to declare, the sight of her literally took his breath away. He stared at her in complete bewilderment, and then, as she explained what she wanted him to do, he shook his head slowly.

"Oh, my dear, my dear," he said. "It would never do. You don't know Mr. Warr. He is very astute. He would never forgive me for playing a trick upon him."

"It is not a trick, Mr. Fairfax," she declared. "I have to earn my living. I am absolutely penniless, as you know, and here is a chance. This Mr. Warr wants a secretary who can type and write a good hand, and you know I can do both. Besides, my experience with father ought to fit me for such a post."

"I know," he said. "You see I—I thought of you, but, unfortunately, he thought you were too young."

"Does he know my name?" demanded Priscilla.

He shook his head.

"Then I'm going," she declared. "Come, Mr. Fairfax, do be sensible! Let me have a chance. Give me a recommendation and send me along. I promise you I'll behave."

Mr. Fairfax looked troubled. Then Priscilla did a strange thing. Taking the little old man's hand in both of hers she bent and kissed his withered cheek.

"Do please, Mr. Fairfax," she said. "I've got nobody in the world now to help me but you."

After that, who could resist? Certainly not Mr. Fairfax.

If Colwyn Warr was surprised at the little faded old woman whom his friend so warmly recommended, he never said as much in words, but sometimes as Priscilla raised her eyes from the machine at which she clicked so industriously she would find him regarding her with a puzzled air, and secretly she trembled. Suppose he should find out? She had been here two months now, and the work was decidedly congenital while her employer was all that she could desire.

He was young, much younger than she imagined, and he was decidedly good-looking. Priscilla found herself wondering why he had not married. Then she would chide herself harshly for troubling with his personal affairs, and would click on as furiously as before.

"You remind me of some one, Miss Priscilla," he said one day, and a quick blush stole to her face, a blush not at all unbecoming to the little spinster she was supposed to be. But he said no more, and Priscilla was glad.

Then a strange thing happened again. Madge Vney, who had known Priscilla in happier times, came home from abroad, and nothing would content her but that Priscilla should resume the old friendship. Madge was rapidly becoming famous through her portrait painting, and one more a celebrity in her salon said that sometimes Priscilla trembled fearfully lest in one of her visits there Colwyn Warr might take drops to quiet her.

Colwyn Warr might take drops to quiet her, but she had to leave her old home Saturday afternoon as she sat listening to the buzz of conversation around her.

The next moment she felt her heart thrill all over as she heard a familiar voice, and in a few minutes Madge Vney was beside her.

"My dear," she said. "Mr. Colwyn Warr wants to be thoroughly tested to you."

What she said, how she got through the next quarter of an hour, Priscilla never knew, but when she got home that night she flung herself down at her old bed.

"I love him. I love him," she moaned, "and now what shall I do? I shall be terrified lest he find me out."

The next day she started early each time her employer spoke to her flushed and stammered and trembled, growing worse when late in the afternoon as she made tea as usual, she crossed the room and sat down beside her old chair.

"Miss Priscilla," he said gravely, "I want your advice."

She looked at him timidly.

"I have fallen in love," he said quietly. "I saw the woman last night. I mean to make my wife. I saw her before about three years ago."

Then she remembered.

Colwyn Warr had once been staying at a house where she had dined, and after dinner she had played bridge to a few music lovers, he among them.

In her agitation now she put up her hands hurriedly. It was too late. The smoke of her pipe fell, but as she tried to put out her hands to replace them, he put his hand over hers.

"No, Priscilla," he said. "I have known all along. Let me see you as you are darling."

She looked up and met his eyes sparkling with merriment.

"You have known?" she gasped. He nodded.

"But why—" she began.

GIRLS OF AUSTRALIAN BUSH.

"Lady Help" Can Scrub, Wash and Iron and Play Piano.

Girls of the Australian bush—that cast virgin forest of gum trees that covers the island continent almost from end to end are wonderfully deaf and domesticated, says an exchange. There is nothing they can't do. They can scrub, iron, wash, cook, harness a horse, milk a cow or kill a fowl.

They play the piano with a wonderful touch that a Savoy night envy, a velvet, passionate touch. Then can "do up" shirts, and will wash and iron a full mouth frock in no time then wear it with a smiling grace. They passionately love books, love to steal away in solitude and lie on the grass with a novel or a book of poems. It may be quite safely said that no people in the world love poetry so much as the people in the Australian bush.

Life is simple in the bush. People arrive in a buggy or on horseback when no one has ever seen before. They are welcomed and made at home instantly. They may after a day mention the name of some one they know who knows these people they have just come to, or, on the other hand, they may not. Simple-mannered, kind-hearted, marvelously generous are the people in the bush.

The great trouble in the bush is the servant question. Hard as it is to get servants in Australian cities, it is far more difficult to find them in the bush. Bush girls themselves stay and work at home, where there is always much to do. High wages are paid. But thousands of bush homes are run without any other domestic servants than the cook and the lady help. The latter is an institution. She is treated exactly like one of the family. So is the governess. As for a hospital nurse, she has a social position all her own in Australia. It's quite pretty the way they tell you in the bush: "My cousin's a nurse," just as they say in London. "My cousin's a duchess!"

The pack of the Columbia salmon shows a 26 per cent shrinkage from last year. The season has been about 25 per cent short of preceding seasons in duration.

The human body is a machine of such wonderful efficiency that one-fifth of the energy expended by it can be utilized as work, as shown by the recent experiments of Prof. Atwater and Benedict.

It has been reported by the French commission formed for the purpose of making comparative studies of the vertical and inclined styles of handwriting with regard to the health of school children that the inclined style is far simpler and less fatiguing than the vertical style, and less likely to cause spinal curvature and other evil results.

An American firm has established a large dry packing house at Nazir, the chief producing center of Asia Minor. The fruit is moistened for packing with sea water, which has to be sent in barrels from Smyrna 120 miles distant on the coast. Heretofore the fruit crop has been transported to Smyrna for final drying and packing. It has averaged about 110,000 barrel loads a year, a barrel carrying 450 pounds.

It was not until 1826 that government lotteries were abandoned in Britain. For the thirty years preceding an average annual profit of over $1,726,000 had accrued, one contractor alone spending $150,000 in advertisements in a single year. The money thus raised was usually for a particular purpose, such as the improvement of London, the purchase of Tomkyns picture gallery, or the repair of various harbors. From the seventeenth century to the reign of George IV, the crown repeatedly drew considerable revenues from such sources.

The dog trots gaily along in front of those interested in his career, and if they take a path he stops and waits till they rejoin him. The walk is easy to understand him. The walk is about a mile as far as the second pond, where Bernard goes. Bernard goes no further. If ones tries to continue it is at his own risk and peril. Bernard will squat down in order to save the animal the journey and explanation.

It would seem that after Supervisor Ruhn had improved the east end of the yard Nickel ought to be pleased.

Hon. William H. Hanlon, the county superintendent of schools, has discovered a difference between the "SASS" city and SO city. He will enforce the compulsory education law throughout this county.

The "Reckless" prints a story about W. E. Bartholomew who left Richmond to go into the ranching business at Modesto and purchased supposed pellets which afterwards were discovered to be roosters! Well what's the difference, eggs are going up, which indicates that hens don't lay much anyhow. Mr. B. must be careful, it's the lightning rod agent's turn next.

HON. EDWARD HYATT ISSUES SCHOOL LAW.

The Terminal acknowledges the receipt of the best compilation of School Laws of California from the school system that was ever issued. We are indebted to Hon. Edward Hyatt, State Superintendent of Public Instruction for the complimentary copy. The edition for 1909 is a neat volume, with an intelligent arrangement, with a head, body and conclusion. The index is handy.

Prof. Hyatt is interested in practical education throughout the State. He is interested in the schools of Contra Costa County, and the Terminal notes the following points:

1. About fifty changes and additions to the school law were made by the last legislature, more than at any other time within recent years. About 150 bills relating to education were introduced but most of them failed.

2. The School Law, in a new, attractive cover, with an original design, is issued in a large edition of 20,000 copies so that school officers throughout the State may be supplied. It is distributed through the County Superintendents' each of whom receives copies enough for each school clerk in his county, with a few extra for good measure.

3. The new high school law, known as the Thompson Law, begins on Page 80. This is a great advance in high school legislation and has attracted wide attention throughout the United States.

4. The new law authorizing the supervision of the health and development of school children is on Page 49. It is regarded as one of the advanced and hopeful laws of the present time. Three cities of the State have already taken advantage of it—Berkeley, Los Angeles and Oakland.

5. The famous anti-fraternity law which also has attracted wide comment, is on Page 59.

6. Trustees are authorized to provide for the transportation of pupils according to the law on Page 98. Common school trustees are similarly authorized [limited to 15 cents per day per pupil] on Page 46.

7. The new law making it a misdemeanor for any principal, teacher or school officer to cause any child to purchase any supplementary book or books will be found on Page 189.

8. The act establishing a new State Normal at Santa Barbara is to be found on Page 163. The provision for the California Trade School is on Page 165.

To The Public:

For the past four years this Company has been engaged in compiling an up-to-date Modern Abstract Plant of Contra Costa County, and at the present writing we have all conveyances up to date.

We are prepared to issue promptly and accurately Abstracts of Title, Title to Insurance Policies, and in fact any chain of title pertaining to the records of this County.

This office is equipped with a photograph-machine known as the "Rectigraph," being the first machine used in the State of California. With the same we can furnish at a comparatively small cost, practically certified copies of all maps, deeds, or other recorded instruments.

This Company is backed by $100,000 with which to furnish policies of title insurance on lots in the City of Richmond. We will furnish a Title Insurance Policy on any lot in the City of Richmond, insuring the property to the extent of $1,000, for the same price that an Abstract of Title would cost from the date of partition of the San Pablo Rancho.

As references we herewith submit the following: Title Insurance & Guaranty Company, of 250 Montgomery St., San Francisco, Cal.; The Great Western Power Company, 609 Crocker Building, San Francisco, Cal.; First National Bank of Martinez, Contra Costa County, Cal., and in fact any bank, banker or Attorney at Law, of this County.

With the assurance that our work will meet with your approval, we solicit a share of your patronage.

Yours very truly,

Southern Pacific is building track for electric service to Macdonald Avenue depot

Santa Fe Route

This road came to Richmond in 1900 before the Standard Oil refiners, extending for wharves at Ferry Point, tunnel, viaducts, depots, round house, shops, livery, warehouses and Terminal tracks about $1,700,000. Like the Southern Pacific, the Santa Fe's main depot is on Macdonald avenue and it will be of the mission style when moved near First Street.

The Oakland & East Side Railway, the northern terminus of the coast division is here and will use gasoline motors to connect for San Francisco through the Key Route.

All trains of the A. T. & S. F. Ry stop at North and Ohio, for trains to Oakland, and 20 minutes to each station. The Oakland station is for the stop from Oakland station.

At Sixth Street Station all trains to and from Richmond and Oakland stop on flag.

W. B. ERIEL, Agent

Rumor is current that the Santa Fe will establish motor car service to San Francisco and a terminal station at Ohio Avenue and Sixth street, will be erected and the report has not been denied. A station will be also erected at Wall Street.

EAST SHORE & SUBURBAN RY

—Electric cars. Local service.—

This is the best city electric railway system in the world in a city nine years old. Line from County Line to Macdonald Ave. and Twenty-first Street, only to Point Richmond. This is building up the Avenue. Electric cars also stop at the yard.

RICHMOND BELT RAILWAY

The Belt Line connects Richmond with the commerce of the world through the ocean port of San Francisco. It is to be made as a distributing center—a great overland railroads, the Southern Pacific and Santa Fe, which by traffic arrangements, control the belt and its wharves, each assuming separate management every alternate year. The largest vessels afloat discharge and take on cargo and meet the Terminal overland railroads, have a station at San Francisco and San Jose. The Belt Line also carries factory, warehouse, wharf and other employees, twice daily, via East Shore & Suburban electric cars to and from their homes in Richmond.

RICHMOND OPERA HOUSE.

At Richmond Opera House Saturday night there was one of the best shows ever given in this city, and was one of the most popular on the Winter circuit with R. Fitzsimons as local manager, who is very clever in all the details that make of the passing show a brilliant success.

The charming Miss Helen Bridges and her group of artists and the superb scenery and contemporary stage settings excited the risibilities to the fullest expansion and thrilled to the backbone in that exquisite comedy-drama, "Arizona." The theatre-goers are still talking of the talented Miss Bridges.

THE GRAND THEATRE.

The Grand Theatre draws popular crowds. Men, women and children, tiring of the humdrum of life go to the moving picture show for inspiration and relaxation, and the whole Danne family can go at little expense. If they remain at home there would be gossip about the nuptials of Myrita Pierce and Charles Rush; or about how busy the avenue is getting since good shows are coming to stay. There is a growing interest in the entertainments given by Rose & Williams and the galaxy of stars that shine there.

For this door won't open from the inside. Its opening entails an acrobatic feat, to say nothing of a blackened glove."

"The English like the seat by the door, but they wrangle over who is to open it at the terminus. In third class carriages these wrangles often wind up in a free fight."

But a free fight is hardly more inborn; it hardly deters us more than the opening of these doors."

Notted at his reception, the Highlander answered brusquely. Resenting the latter's impudent manner, he asked:

"And whom do you take me for?"

A hell deserving sinner, like myself," came the quick retort.

Returning to Mr. White, he explained the circumstances. "You didn't say that?" eagerly asked the doctor.

"Aye, I did!" replied the other.

"Well, well; I've been wanting to say that to him for the last fifteen years. Here's a £5 note for your fund."

STREET CAR MANNERS.

The Street Car Hog Was Trained When He Was a Pig.

Gentlemen are called so because they have good manners. I wonder why more gentlemen do not ride in the street cars. It may be that they have automobiles.

The other day a person known as a street car hog was choked so bad that he got real black in the face. This happened in New York. The man who choked him was trying to teach him to be polite. But you can't teach a hog much. If every street car hog got choked the right of way would be clogged with pork.

In this town I never saw a man take a woman and pull her out of a seat and take it himself, says a writer in a Philadelphia paper. So manners might be worse here than they are.

Men get into seats, though, and stay there while tired old women with baskets swing from the strap. The men do not pretend to be reading. That used to be the way, and it was a sign that the men were ashamed. It is out of date now.

But, perhaps, the women are partly to blame. They do not teach their little boys to give up seats to other women. They used to forget to thank the men, too, for giving them their seats. For men did do this once. When a woman brings a sturdy lad into a crowded car she puts him into the only vacant seat and then glares around for another.

Lots of times when she comes in there are three or four vacant seats, but she does not look around for them, but grabs a strap right off. Then men come in and take the seats, and she looks just as mad, but you can't blame them much. Sometimes women spread their skirts over two or three seats and get real haughty when requested to concede.

But this is not to defeat the man who crowds aside and beats them to a seat. No, it is not in favor of the man who stands in the aisle and when a seat becomes vacant jams it and leaves a woman still standing. Of course, to call him a hog is to use of course of speech. But he was trained when only a pig. This is another figure of speech.

There are some gentlemen who travel on the street cars, and ladies do too, but they have so many painful experiences that they wish they might walk.

POLICE NOT TO BLAME.

Big City Has Countless Places Where Fugitives May Hide.

Within a few weeks, says a Brooklyn newspaper, four atrocious murders have been committed in New York and in no case have the police been able to intercept the criminals. To a degree this reflects upon the intelligence of the detective force, yet in justice to the police the difficulties confronting those who set out to trail assassins in big city should not be overlooked. It is easy to clamor against the police when a murder mystery remains unsolved, but it is well to remember that all great centers of population have their mysterious crimes and their unraveled clews, and that this is as true of European cities where the science of detection has been brought to its highest estate, as it is of cities in the United States.

There are innumerable holes and corners in this huge metropolis, where the taking of life can be accomplished without the cries of the victim being heard by any human being. The ease with which a man choked and beat a woman to death in a dark and obscure hallway on East 11th street the other night and then easily slipped away from the neighborhood of his crime is typical of the facilities the city offers to criminals of the worst sort. There are hundreds of tenements on the East and West sides of Manhattan where the sounds of a fatal scuffle would attract no more than passing attention from people accustomed to drunken brawls and family squabbles.

The evaporation of all the oceans would leave salt enough to cover the entire globe to a depth of 200 feet, equal to the bulk above sea level, of North and South America.
